Chapter 3

Livingston

July 2019

John, Pat & Hank

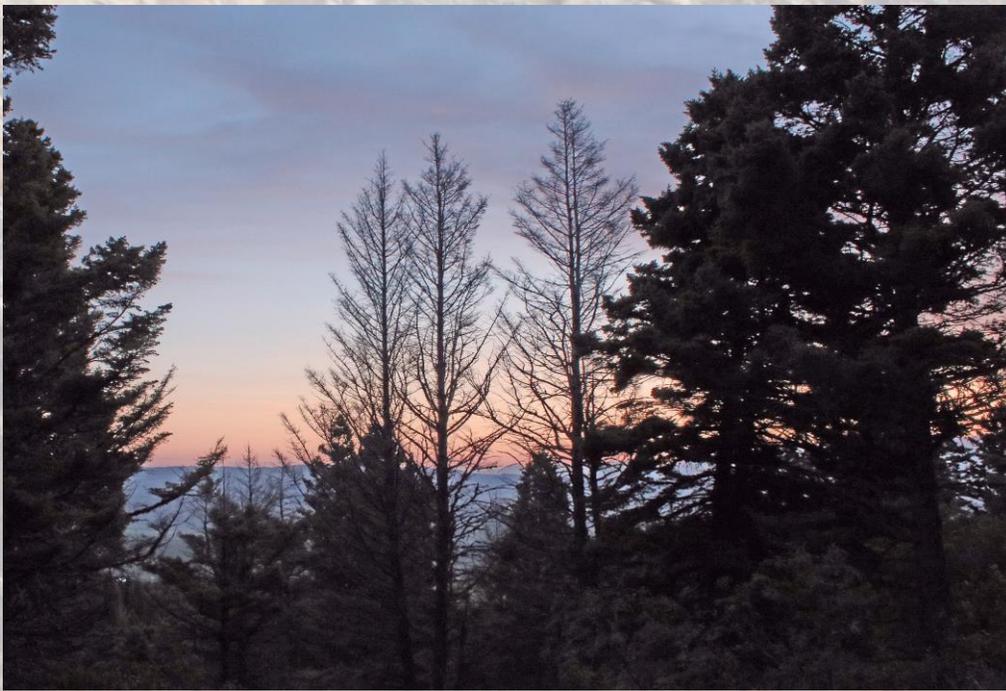

We drove through Livingston and turned back towards the mountains to get to Granny's Cabin. We passed a meadow that had what I thought was a wolf, but was later assured that it was a neighbors' pet. There was a nice fat deer in the area too. Granny's Cabin is a wonderful place completely off the grid.

Some photos of the interior of Granny's and the proprietor's workshop down the road.

The next morning we watched the sunrise from Granny's then drove back to Bozeman and then to the Spanish Creek area. Spanish Creek is on the eastern side of the Gallatin Divide and also gets water from the Divide snowmelt. Blaze Mountain is adjacent to the Gallatin Divide. We passed several herds of buffalo along the way. The road dead ends at several trailheads. Some are frequented by horsemen.

Walking along Spanish Creek toward Blaze Mountain on the left. That's a pretty big blaze. Definitely a beautiful place.

 Raymond & Amber - (and your adorable dog
 who was sitting in the golf cart when we cruised).
 Granny's Cabin was very rustic, quaint and peaceful.
 We appreciate you extending the stay for us and for the knowledge about Livingston and restaurants, etc. We enjoyed exploring East and South from here and you and the area to be wonderful and beautiful.

Granny's Cabin overlooks the Yellowstone River. We leave Granny's on 12 July 2019 and drive south. We find delicious pastries and coffee at the Wildflower Bakery.

We passed through Gallatin and the into Yellowstone NP by waterfalls and Mammoth Hot Springs.

This guy was trotting down the road in Yellowstone and seemed unimpressed with the cars passing by. Then another drive by the Tetons on the way to Pinedale.
